- Our collections: natural sciences, art, industry and transport, social and cultural history, archaeology, and library and archives
- Our Research: our Research Strategy 2022-2027 outlines our commitment to:
 - Use our collections and spaces to support research across the natural sciences, social sciences, arts and humanities
 - Ensure that everyone in Wales can shape and participate in the cultural life of our nation

Four areas:

Community action research, especially with communities in Wales that are under-represented in our collections, to share new stories or reinterpret stories we currently tell

Improving the inclusivity and accessibility of our services and collections, particularly where the research is co-designed by communities of relevance

Interdisciplinary approaches that use our collections and/or involve our communities. We particularly welcome projects that either work across, or bring new approaches to, areas of our archaeology, art, natural science and social history collections.

How cultural heritage organisations can support wellbeing and social prescribing; we especially welcome proposals that identify potential collaborators or take a community-led approach
